	On 5 January 1952, the Alte Grenadier Kaserne on Strelitzerstrasse was occupied to capacity. About 150 troops with red-bordered black epaulets were seen in the barracks yard, while 10 soldiers with red-bordered black epaulets practiced with three 1.02-mm mortars in the adjoining training area.
	Five 37-mm AA guns were observed to be emplaced in the restricted Schlossgarten area on 5 January 1952.

	On 3 January 1952, the Neue Infanterie Kaserne on Penzliner Chaussee quartered from 3,000 to 4,000 troops, most of whom wore red-bordered black epaulets with tank insignia. Numerous tanks were seen in the billeting area. Soldiers told that the installation quartored tank units and an armored reconnaissance unit. The latter unit was said to be commanded ,	by Colonel Kusnetsev (phonetic spelling) (fnu). A local resident said that the officers in the installation included one Volonel Khromov (phonetic spelling) (fnu). about 150 tanks, primarily T-34s, were stationed in the Neue ſ	Infanterie Kaserne.
	During the period specified, the troops were seen receiving close-brown arill at squad and platoon level with and without arms and holding field exercises up to company level at the training area west of the installation. Up to 60 trucks were occasionally involved in these field exercises. Most of the tanks remained in sheds at the training field during the nights, with only a few tanks returning to the installation upon completion of the exercises. Between 25 December 1951 and 3 January 1952, about 250 recruits were seen practicing individual drill and drill at squad level including saluting and marching in the barracks yard. About 90 soldiers received training in firing in the adjoining training area, and other troops were engaged in record firing with subcaliber bores inserted into the guns of two T-34 tanks.

From 40 to 50 trucks were seen in the garages in the billeting 25X1 On 18 December 1951, a Gorman employee in the Alte Grenadier Kaserne said 12. that all troops at the Neustrelitz military post were allegedly alorted on 12 December and the following days. Officers and men were said to be restricted to quarters, and vehicles were said to be kept ready for operation. Dischargees from all barracks installations at the post returned home in the middle of December 1951. Small groups of up to 10 men were seen on from some of the dischargees their way to the railroad station. that they went to a collecting point in Frankfurt/Oder in order to be shipped from there to the U.S.S.R. by the train. soldiers that recruits were expected to arrive at the post in the middle of December 1951. * Comment. The information confirms the disposition of units in Neustrolitz as specified in the last report of November 1951. The 20 x 122-mm field howitzers which, according to paragraph 11 of the present report, were seen in the Alte Grenadier Kaserne cannot be accounted for because a tank division is believed to have only one organic artillery battalion with 12 x 122-mm field howitzers. The artillery battalion of the 9th Cds Tank Div is carried in the restricted area on Gerhart Hauptmann Strasse on the basis of the reference report. Furthermore, the 40 to 50 trucks observed in the Alte Grenadier Kaserne are indicative of the presence of only one unit, namely the division's 234th Mort Regt which is carried there. The regiment probably has a total of 65 to 75 motor wehicles. It is probably under the command of Colonel Orlov (fnu) who is reported for the first time. Lieutenant Colonel Kalininshenkov (fnu) was only once identified as commanding officer of the 234th Mort Regt in August 1947. Other officers mentioned in the present report for the first time are Lieutenant Ceneral Shlapin (fnu), tentatively carried as commanding general of the 9th Gds Tank Div; and Colonel Kusnetsev (fnu), tentatively carried commanding officer of the division's 7bth Gds Ron Bn 25X1
